

How to Cite Sources

Direct Quote: print source

Quote: “Less than half of all internet users use English as their native language, and this figure continues to decrease.”

Author: Barry James

Title: English’s Hegemony is Challenged Globally

Newspaper: International Herald Tribune

Date: February 12, 2001

Page: B3

Use the information above to write an in-text citation:

Second-hand Quote: print source

Quote: President of the Council of Ministers for the European Union, Anna Lindh, says that “Russian, Mandarin, French, German, Spanish, Portuguese, and Japanese have all been guilty of extinguishing other languages.”

Author: Barry James

Title: English’s Hegemony is Challenged Globally

Newspaper: International Herald Tribune

Date: February 12, 2001

Page: B3

Use the information above to write an in-text citation:

Direct Quote: electronic source

Quote: “The British have always been keen to capitalize on English as a strategic and commercial asset. English is the most widely learned foreign language in Europe, because Britain's partners recognize it as is a necessary communicative tool.”

Author: Robert Phillipson
Title: English yes, but equal language rights first
Newspaper: Guardian Unlimited
Date: April 19, 2001
Website: <http://www.guardian.co.uk/GWeekly/Story.html>
Paragraph #: 3

Use the information above to write an in-text citation:

Second-hand Quote: electronic source

Quote: Ulrich Ammon, an analyst at the German Research Foundation, believes that “it’s no longer possible to consider German the language of science. German has definitely lost its place to English.”

Author: Robert Phillipson
Title: English yes, but equal language rights first
Newspaper: Guardian Unlimited
Date: April 19, 2001
Website: <http://www.guardian.co.uk/GWeekly/Story.html>
Paragraph #: 3

Use the information above to write an in-text citation:
